

I don't pay $10 a month to listen to traffic and weather stations on XM Radio. I pay the money to listen to music stations that are far superior to my local ones. The traffic and weather coverage is a nice bonus, and in no way is it harming local radio stations. These radio stations just refuse to offer content that will propel them into the future and provide competition for satellite radio. This is a meagar issue in the scope of the world right now, and I urge the FCC to quickly vote no on the NAB's petition 04-160. Because I pay for the privilege to listen to satellite radio, the FCC (or any other government agency) should have no say in what is broadcast on their stations. To do so is to violate the First Amendment.
